DEATH ASKED FOR KIDNAPERS

The News Review

By Bruce Catton

WHILE the specialists down at Washington grope about among the wreckage of the NRA to see if any of the pieces can be patched up and used again, the rest of us might properly take time out to meditate over the underlying issue the U. S. Supreme Court's decision brings into prominence.

That issue is nothing less than the question, How far can the original American attitude toward the functions of the central government be preserved in the face of modern conditions?

The confusion of thought which resulted in erection of an NRA framework so completely unconstitutional that the court was unanimous in knocking it down comes straight from the fact that we tend to look on the federal government in a light entirely different from that in which its founders viewed it.

The men who founded the American government represented many schools of thought, but they were close to agreement on one point: they distrusted a strong central government as an enemy of democracy.

X X X

Their first attempt to found a government left the several states almost independent. The articles of confederation were too loose. It took only a few years of experience to prove that a tighter union was necessary; but even when the existing constitution was framed, the framers took pains to limit the powers of the federal government, and to reserve all possible rights to the state.

Since hen the whole structure of society has changed. In place of a predominantly agricultural nation, in which each community was largely self-sufficient, we got a tremendously complex industrial nation with commercial and financial ties that made every section dependent on all the others.

In the face of that change, there arose a feeling that many problems could be handled properly only by the national government. We long ago discovered, for instance, that railroad regulation would fail if left to the states. We seem to be moving toward a similar attitude in regard to public utilities.

X X X

In the NRA decision, the supreme court simply reminded us that we have carried this tesdency altogether too far.

For while one section of public thought tends to rely more and more on Washington to provide the reforms and the supervision which a complex twentieth century society needs, the fact remains that our basic low is founded on the belief that the central government should do as little of that kind of work as possible.

The problem of the moment, then, is to think the whole matter through with extreme care, determine just how closely we wish to cling to this original theory, find out exactly where modern conditions make necessary a revision of it, and then formulate our future policies on a logical and enduring basis.

Foes Suspicious of Skeleton NRA

Senate Opponents to Demand Repeal of Anti-Trust Law Exemptions

WASHINGTON, —(AP)— Senate opponents of the wreckned NRA announced they would demand repeal of provisions permitting exemptions from the anti-trust laws.

A resolution approved by the house yesterday, would continue the recovery of the law until next April, with the authority for compulsory codes eliminated because of the Supreme Court's decision holding them invalid.

Senators who have led the fight against the NRA were skeptical of the resolution despite reassurance from President Roosevelt that the anti-trust laws would be fully restored.

This group was concerned abou a provision of the old act continuing authority for the president to relax the anti-trust laws for voluntary agreements between industrial units.

Senator Clarke, Democrat, Missouri, author of the Senate resolution to which the House amendment was attached, announced he would move to send the legislation to the Finance committee for an amendment repealing the suspension of the anti-trust laws.

Chairman Harrison of the Finance committee who is in charge of the resolution for the administration, is confident that he could gain Senate approval of the House amendment without serious delay. Because the old law will expire June 16 he will oppose the attempt to send the measure back to the committee.

Hempstead May Lose Agri. Agents

Judge Stephens Says That Funds Are Unavailable

No Money to Meet June Salaries From County Funds

NO MONEY FOR NURSE

No Announcement Is Made as to Future for Agents

Hempstead county may lose its agricultural agent, home demonstration agent and the county health nurse unless funds can be obtained for their salaries, it was learned Monday.

County Judge H.M. Stephens told The Star Monday that funds for their salaries and for hospitalization had been exhausted, and announced that the county would be unable to bear any further expense toward payment of their salaries this year.

Compensation of the agents is jointly paid by the county and the federal government, the county bearing half the cost.

Judge Stephens said that May salaries had been met, but that he would be unable to allow claims for June salaries or for any other month this year.

"An apropriation of $,000 for each of the agents was made by the quorum court—but unless the county has the money for these items they cannot be paid," the judge declared.

The county health nurse has been allowed $600 annually by the county, but this fund too, has been exhausted, and no money is available now, the judge said.

County Agent Stanley was out of the city Monday and could not be reached for a statement regarding what future steps would be taken.

It is believed that an attemp would be made here to raise funds through public contribution to retain the agents, but no announcement of this was made Monday.

Damage done to the city's stores mounted to thousands of dollars.

Free Tuition Is Offered Students

Twenty-Four Eligible in Hempstead for U. of A. Education

County Judge H. M. Stephens announced Monday that he would appoint 24 students in Hempstead county as beneficiaries in the University of Arkansas at Fayetteville.

These appointments can be used only in the university at Fayetteville and not in the medical school of the university at Little Rock. The state fixes a tuition fee for the medical school which must be paid by all members.

Should applications in Hempstead county exceed 24, the students may be referred to the president of the university who has power to give them appointments belonging to the count-

College "Grads" Finding Job Outlook Brightest in Years

Students, Ready for Grind, Are Finding That Employment More Readily Than in Recent Years

By the Associated Press

American college students who are doffing their caps and gowns and rolling up their sleeves apparently face a kinder future than did their mates of the last few years.

A survey of college placement bureaus shows graduating students finding employment more readily than in recent years. Some directors regard 1935 as the best year since 1929—the beginning of the depression.

Governmental agencies are being credited in some areas for improved employment of graduating students. Engineers are particularly affected by the federal program requiring trained men.

Big Industry Demand Heavy

Some colleges find large industry making a heavy demand on the schools for graduating students, although smaller businesses are reported lagging in absorption of college products.

Many of the placement bureaus agree, however, that business and industry are again turning to the American campus for material to train in particular fields. Chemical and certain lines of engineering industries are reported making greater demands than almost any other fields.

The smalled organizations, such as department stores, are tending to start college sudents in jobs formerly given high school graduates.

Graduates Expect Less

It also is generally agreed among the placement bureaus that students are going forth with more modest hopes than they had in he boom years. They express a willingness to take jobs at lower salaries than expected in the period prior to and right after 1929, and they also expect less rapid promotions.

Bailey's Ruling Left Commission Without $500,000

Department Not Entitled to Appropriation of Big Fund

FUTRELL COMMENTS

No Special Session Before Congress Completes Action

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Attorney General Carl E. Bailey wrote an opinion Saturday which made the welfare commission practicaly inoperative but Governor J. M. Futrell said no special session of the legislature would be held pending final action of congress on the social security bill.

Under Bailey's ruling, the department of welfare would not be entitled to an appropriation of $500,000 because the last general assembly failed to appropriate the money from some specific fund and the welfare fund would lose an additional $300,000 which Bailey ruled should be transferred to the charities fund.

Governor Futrell's statement, made before Bailey rendered his opinion, said that a special session would be called if the public welfare demanded it but that "under no circumstances should there be a special session prior to the close of the present session of congress."

Bailey's opinion said that the legislature, by new legislation could "accomplish a situation in which both the welfare commission and the state hospital and tuberculosis sanitorium could function unhampered and added "in our opinion the supreme court or this office cannot do so."

Bailey's Opinion

The attorney general's ruling would prevent the state welfare commission from drawing upon the general fund for part of the 35 per cent sales tax allotted to the general fund, which many lawmakers have said since they believed was being appropriated to the welfare fund.

The welfare commission would have less than $150,000 annually to operate with if the $500,000 appropriation were lost and the $300,000 transferred to the charities fund to care for patients at the state hospital for nervous diseases and the tuberculosis sanitorium.

The department would be rendered practically inoperative, with only about 2 cents a month each being available for the 42,000 unemployables which the state Emergency Relief Administration is expected to return to the state for its care after August.

A special session of he state legislature to amend the welfare act and make specific appropriations for the department seemed the only way to provide sufficient funds for its operation, in view of Bailey's opinion.

"If the public welfare shall demand a special session of the legislature, one will be called," Governor Futrell said. "Before one is called, the circumstances must be such as to preclude other alternatives and the end to be attained must be definitely assured.

"It is probabble that inconsistencies appearing in recent statutes may be reconciled and the purpose of the legislature effected without a special session.

"Several months will have expired before a substantial sum will accelmulate from the sales tax. Under no circumstances should there be a special session prior to the close of the present session of congress.

"The outcome of proposed security legislation now pending in congress cannot be forecast. Problems that may arise from such legislation may not be dealt with by the states before they exist."

O'Reilly had disarmed and warned the minister the day before the fatal shooting in an Orange street.

Regulations On Sales Tax Given

No Charge on Items Selling for Less Than 13 Cents

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—State Revenue Commissioner Earl R. Wiseman late Saturday promulgated regulations to govern collections of the Arkansas two per cent sales tax, setting forth specific food and drug exemptions and ruling that no tax would be collected on articles selling at 12 cents or under.

On sales ranging from 13 cents to 63 cents inclusive, he ruled, a one-cent tax would apply, and two cents tax will be collectable on sales falling in the 63 cents to $1.12 bracket.

The tax on sales from $1.13 up, the revenue department ruled, will be "scaled accordingly, major fractions governing."

The regulations were published "to become effective on the day the law becomes operative," prospectively June 21 under the supreme court decision of last Monday holding the tax act valid. The tax could not become effective sooner, and the effective date might be delayed if an expected motion for rehearing is filed with the court.

Rules Are Given

Wiseman emphasized that the rules announced Saturday were those possible for perfection at this time, adding:

"Supplemental regulations clarifying all complicated questions will necessarily follow from time to time, until the sales tax is being collected on a sound and well settled basis."

Pointing out that the law specifically exempts from the tax, flour, meat, lard, sugar, soda, baking powder, salt, meal, butter, fats and eggs, the commissioner ruled that "no other food stuffs except those stated will be exempt from the tax."

"Any questions arising as to what is lard, meat, etc., will be promptly answered by me upon receipt of a written inquiry from any taxpayer.

Two Confessions to Abduction of Weyerhaeuser Boy

THIRD SUSPECT FLEES

William Mahan Is Named as "Brains" in Kidnaping Plot

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah—(AP)—Announcement that the death penalty would be demanded for the kidnapers of George Weyerhaueser was made Monday as "G" men and local authorities pushed an intensive manhunt for William Mahan, named as the principal in the abduction.

Authorities also made preparations to return to Tacoma with two alleged confessed members of the gang that were capteured.

Officers and Salt Lake City police said that federal agents planned to arraign Harmon M. Waley, 24, ex-convict, and his wife, 19, here Monday and then leave immediately with them by plane for the northwest.

Department of Justice agents said that Waley and his wife, taken into custody after the woman attempted to pass a five-dollar bill identified as part of the ransom money, had confessed their part in the kidnaping and had implicated Mahan.

Principal Sought

WASHINGTON —(AP)— J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced the arrest of Harmon M. Waley, 24, and his wife Margaret, at Salt Lake City, Utah. He said they had confessed.

William Mahan, immediately the object of a great manhunt, was involved by the Waleys, Hoover said. Mahan was said to have abandoned an automobile found at Butte, Mont., Monday with $15,000 of the ransom money.

Hoover believes that the three alone executed the $200,000 kidnaping at Tacoma, Wash., although he declined comment directly.

Woman Arrested

Hoover waved aside questions as to how much of the ransom money had been recovered, in addition to the $15,000 in the abandoned car, but said Mrs. Waley had been caught at Salt Lake City by the federal operatives as she attempted to pass one of the marked bills.

Speaking crisply and spelling out names, Hoover told bare details and then smiled as he said other details "must wait until later."

Both Waley and Mahan had criminal records, he said, and their photographs were among the more than five million filed in the steel cases on the upper floors of the Justice building.

Questioned about the woman in the case, Hoover said there were few details available. Asked if she was the "beautiful blond" mentioned as having passed ransom bills on the route between Tacoma and Salt Lake City, Hoover said with a grin:

"That's probably just newspapermen's license."

Markets

New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS.(AP)—Cotton opened 10 to 14 points lower Monday as reports of favorable weather in the belt induced light offerings. There was some profit taking after Saturday's advance and while the market absorbed the sales opening prices were a few points lower.

July opened at 11.52, October at 11.22, December at 11.21 and Janary at 11.23 and prices held around these levels during the first half hour.

After the routing first call business the volume of offerings fell off and prices fluctuated in a narrow rangee.

New York

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Cotton futures opened easy, nine to 11 lower under moderate liquidation and a slow demand with the foreign markets closed. July 11.60; October 11.29, December 11.28, January 11.29, March 11.24, May 11.38.

Saturday's active covering movement left the market in a weaker technical position and prices sagged further during the early trading. Interest centered in the July and October positions with the latter months easing from 11.30 to 11.23 but by the end of the first hour it was selling at 11.27 with the general market 10 to 12 points net lower at that time. Statements by officials of the cotton producers' pool that it had sold 450,000 bales since May 9 and that it expected to sell at least 350,000 additional before the end of the crop year attracted attention.

THE NEW DEAL IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON.—Dr. Tugwell's enemies are licking their chops. They suspect that the Rural Resettlement Administration will prove to be a millstone around the young doctor's neck. Many of Administrator Tugwell's friends fear exactly the same thing. The NRA is his big part in the work-relief program.

Secrecy veils the build-up and the planning activities of the Tugwell organization, on the theory that the less said now, the better One gahers from what seeps out that this is the most conspicuous piece of good judgment of which RRA can yet be accused.

It's nothing new to find a New Deal agency floundering around, seeking its bearings. But the character of the personnel being recruited for this one, with a very few outstanding exceptions, is such as to make Tugwell's admirers break into frequent spasms of tears.

No shabbier trick has been pulled in this administration than when the powers wished on Tugwell the expensive, mismanaged Subsistence Homestead program, which seems to stand as New Deal Mess No. 1.

It appears now that Dr. Tugwell is trying to wish Subsistence Homesteads back on the Interior Department and it will be well for him if he is spared the headache of liquidating it.

He will have enough grief without that.

Hope Rex Fools Foes

Barring a reversal of present form, most of the prize lemons in the disintegrating NRA will find jobs with RRA.

Tugwell has been allocated $100,000,000 to date for this job of resettling.

Help Children Acquire Good Living Habits.

A little help, apleasant word of praise coming from you will enable your child to form good habits and develop properly much faster than he would if left alone.

Children generally learn by practice. From infancy they begin to acquire the necessary technic, for instance, to feed themselves, and soon they know how to handle a spoon correctly and how to drink from a cup.

A small boy gets on a bicycle and promptly falls off. With a little practice he learns how to balance himself successfully, co-ordinating his mucles in such manner that balance is maintained and he is able to go forward.

Eventually he learns to ride the bicycle so well that his actions are quite automatic and he does not even hold the handle-bars in propelling himself forward. This is learning by establishing a habit.

The intelligent child learns also by what is known as the "trial and error" method. For example, it will sample a neew food substance and if attracted will eat it again.

It may, for example, try to put on its stockings while standing up. Eventually it sits down and pulls on the stockings, finding that the process is carried out much more easily in this manner.

If the child is intelligent, it will thereafter sit down before pulling on its stockings; if not, the child may go on day after day trying to put on the stockings while standing up. Children have to have time for learning.

Of great importance in getting suitable reactions in learning is what the psychologists call "a satisfying effect." If an activity is successful, pleasing, and satisfying to a child, the child is more likely to repeat that activity.

Much depends, therefore, on a suitable amount of praise in connection with any new achievement and suitable instruction as to its value in daily life.

The way to cause any person to learn is to make learning pleasurable. A dry lecture can make learning exceedingly unpleasant, and children do not get on well when the teachers are dull.

Many of the activities of the child which seem to be anti-social and unsatisfactory become very useful if diverted into proper fields.

A considerable part of the satisfying effect of any performance is an interest developed in that performance. Children do not want to learn except when learning is pleasing. If their interest is developed, however, they have the satisfying effect which will certainly encourage learning.

Every child differs from every other child, and it is necessary for parents and teachers to have a good understanding of the nature of the child in developing its ability to co-ordinate muscle action with natural control.

A BOOK A DAY

By BRUCE CATTON

The Blind Cruelty of a War Machine —"Paths of Glory" Is Novel of Wartime Injustice.

"Paths of Glory," by Humphrey Cobb, is another novel of the World War; and despite the great number of war novels that have preceded it, it is one of the most remarkable of the lot.

It tells about a French infantry regiment which was detailed to take a heavily fortified hill on the western front. A general advance was contemplated, and it could not succeed if this hill remained in German hands. So general headquarters airily ordered the hill taken at any cost.

The army commander suspected that the hill was impregnable, but orders were orders, and he passed the word down to the division commander. This officer had an even stronger suspicion, but he was offered promotion if the hill fell, so he passed the order down to the regimental commander.

The colonel knew perfectly well that the hill couldn't be taken by one lone regiment; but it did no good to kick, and the attack got under way. It was doomed from the start, and failed in 20 minutes with sickening slaughter.

Then the divisional general, robbed of his promotion, disciplined the regiment for "cowardice" by ordering the execution of one man from each of the four companies in the attacking battalon.

That is Mr. Cobb's story, told with great eloquence and understanding. It is interesting to note that he indicts war, not because of its bloodshed and cruelty, but because it sets in motion a blind, impersonal, and sometimes very stupid machine, which, once started, is simply beyond stopping.

Published by the Viking Press, this book sells for $2.50.

Parents Gambling Superstitions Give Children Poor View on Life

I don't know the first principle of the chain letter racket. Moreover it is dreadful to be apuzzlehead and always see justification on both sides of a question.

Tolerance may be an admirable quality, but I find it most inconvenient never to be able to quite condemn anything at face value. Perhaps one can cook up more trouble for one's self by being a "tolerator" and a "justifier" than by any other process of mental discipline.

Actually the chain-letter business seems to be making a lot of people happy at present. That it must be a flash-in-the-pan is also apparent—for two reasons. One is that in time repeaters, as near as I can figure, will be left even with the board. The other is that in any game where someone wins eventually, the others are left holding the bag.

Gambling Is Contagious

Sweepsteaks, it seems to me are no worse means for a fool to part with his money than ringing the cane or hitting the bull's-eye at a County Fair. Oh, yes, I know the dangers, and the so-called immorality of gambling. I know all about bridge, too, and "birdies." I even know about dominoes for charity as I went to such a party once and won a brace of vases I never could have afforded otherwise.

I've even ventured two dollars at Hialeah. You, too, would have straightened your specks, studied that tote board, and peeled off an unlucky bill if you stepped within fifty feet of the track and the germ of the turf got up your nose. One goes to look-see. One stops to kibits. Well—it's Rome and nobody knows you. "Here, boy, this goes acorss the board on 'Tip Toe.' Give me a ticket.

Bridge makes people mad—all betting does, or brings them to the verge of despondency. Thus I indict all gambling, not from a moral standpoint, but for the emotional havoc it creates. Real values of life recede and life becomes a repetition of false hopes and excitement that work like dope.

I have saved the whip-lash until the end. I have one perfectly silhouetted intolerance, thank heaven. It is the numbers racket.

Numbers Is Worst

Of all forms of betting, the numbers racket has resulted in more superstition and more insanity, to say nothing of morbid depression and jealousy and resentment, than any other type of get-for-nothing scheme on earth.

Literally millions of children live in this atmosphere. Think of it—parents talking numbers at breakfast, dinner and supper, hunting through dream books, counting birds, adding up street cars, interpretting sneezes, tipping off telephone and street numbers—the whole world turned into hieroglyphics, and real life as incidental as a garbage truck.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

Dry Rouge Is Needed to Repair Makeup.

Smart society women who are sports enthusiasts have turned to subtle, light-colored makeup in keeping with the warmer weather and summer clothes. The dark nail polish, rouge and lipstick have been relegated to the winter shelf.

After all, cosmetics that were just right during the winter and early spring months are too heavy and obvious to use when sunshine is bright. Every woman ought to have special preparations to put on from now until October.

During the season when your skin gets more oily and stays fairly moist from the heat, you ought to carry dry rouge with you. The creamy variety you put on in the morning will be absorbed before noon. From then on, you'll have to freshen up with color from a compact. Be sure that the rouge in your vanity case matches perfectly the cream rouge you put on at home. Nothing is worse than to start with a pinkish shade and then to put alayer of orangetoned rouge over it.

You'll find that you can use a lighter and finer-textcured powder, too. If you have oily skin, cream foundations probably will be more satisfactory than liquid types. Try several, however, until you find one that holds your powder in place.

Stock up on skin tonic and plan to with a clean cotton pad that has been you have cleaned your face, pat it keep the bottle in the ice box. After dipped in the tonic and then let the freshener dry before you start to apply cosmetics.

NEXT: Summer lipsticks.

Fans Give Pitts Rousing Ovation

Plain That Fans Have Taken Ex-Convict to Their Hearts

Albany, N. Y.—With minor league officialdom's final verdict near Albany baseball fandom Sunday cast 4,000 rousing votes for Alabama.

Hawkins stadium, home if the Albany Senators, shook with a unanimous cheer as Edwin C. (Alabama) Fitts, the ex-Sing Sing prison athlete, who has become baseball's problem child No. 1, was introduced from the home plate by his sponsor, Johnny Evers, Albany International League Club general manager and former Chicago Cubs' second baseman.

For a half minute the fans alternately yelled and applauded as Pitts, cap in hand, flushed under his sunburn.

When the tumult died down, the felon gulped and cried: "Thank you, folks, thank you."

"Gosh," he said later in the dugout, "I've got to make good after that. I'm sure on the spot now."

Despite the edict of Judge W. G. Branham, minor league czar, which temporarily bans Pitts from the game, it was plain that the fans had taken him to their hear and enlised him in the ranks.

Summer Sweethearts

By Mabel McElliott © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

KATHARINE STRYKHURST, beautiful, 20, falls in love with MICHAEL HEATHEROE, owner of a riding school. Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother a snob.

ZOE PARKER, Katharine's friend, has an unhappy love affair and is saved from suicide by young DR. JOHN KAYE.

Overhearing two detectives ask for Michael's address, Katharine rushes to warn him, although she has not seen him since his engagement to SALLY MOON, local roquette, has been announced.

Michael refuses to go away unless Katharine comes with him. They are married in an obscure little town. Then Michael insists on returning to face the detectives. He learns he is heir to a fortune and title in Ireland. Michael leaves at once for New York to see the lawyer handling the case. He is injured in a traffic accident.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXVIII

KATHARINE threw wide the casement window, looking down at the garden below. The long shadows of morning lay everywhere; the borders were starred with dewy drops. Yesterday, yesterday, she said to herself, had been her wedding day. . . .

Today she and Michael would acknowledge their marriage before all the world. She had decided that in the still watches of the night. There was to be no more waiting, no more pretense or secrecy. By this time Sally Moon would have heard the news no doubt, from Michael's own lips. Sally would be angry—furiously angry—but that would pass. Pride would come to her rescue. She could make it appear that she had discarded Michael.

At the thought of him, Katharine's eyes darkened suddenly. She drew a long breath. She was Michael's wife. The miracle had happened yesterday. . . .

At any moment now he would telephone her. The bell would ring and before one of the maids could answer it Katharine herself would do so.

Katharine bathed and dressed, still wrapped in the dream. Her green linen frock and the brown and white shoes with the buckskin fringes and a string of dull white beads that looked creamy against her sunburn. . . .

But Michael didn't call. Breakfast passed. Bertine said something about missing the rolls for lunch the day before, and Katharine came out of her trance to stare at her stepmother as at a perfect stranger.

"What did you say, Bertine?"

"I said that Cook was furious when the rolls didn't arrive yesterday. We waited and waited, Victor," said Bertine, with that infuriating smile of hers, "and this girl never showed up. Nora Willis was here and there wasn't a thing but whole wheat bread in the house. You know Nora hates it—"

This went on for some time. Katharine, breaking bits of toast and arranging them in a geometrical pattern on the pink Spode plate, paid little heed. Bertine was trying to irritate her, trying to goad her into some sort of explanation. But this particular morning her stepmother's jibes simply could not reach Katharine.

* * *

HER father grunted over his newspaper which he had folded back to the financial page. The telephone rang in the study. Katharine could hear the jangling of the bell and every nerve in her taut body responded to the summons. Any moment now Ellen would call her. . . .

Her heart raced and slowed again. Not for her.

The morning droned past. Michael must be angry with her—she must have been too repressive in her manner when he called her last night. Oh, he'd have to learn to understand her better—he'd have to see it meant nothing when she was cool and standoffish. She had crawled into her shell for so many years that it was hard, all at once, to break the habit. And she loved him so terribly!

At last, unable to bear the silence further, she got into the car and drove over to the riding school. Tips was in the yard, feeding some chickens that fluffed about on the bare earth. He looked up expectantly.

"No'm, Mister Michael, he ain't come back, miss." Tips' white teeth showed. "Pa, he thinks it's mighty funny. He went off las night soon after those men left. . . ."

"Went off?" Katharine stared at him.

"Yes'm. He say he goin' to New York, and he say for Pa to lock up. This morning when I goin' to call him for breakfast, sure enough, he ain't been back."

"Well, thank you very much, Tips. No, I won't make an appointment to ride just now."

Katharine went back to the car. Automatically her fingers turned the ignition key. She started the motor, drove off almost blindly.

Michael had gone away! He hadn't let her know. What in heaven's name did this mean?

Had he told her the truth when he said those men could not possibly bring evil tidings to him, that his slate was clear? She would have staked her life yesterday upon his honesty, but this new development brought terror to her soul.

What was she to do? There was no one she could tell, no one she could turn to now.

Or was there?

Violet Merser's wise, kind, gentle face came to Katharine's mind. In spite of her instinctive distrust, her impulse always to stand upon her own feet, she was drawn irresistibly to this new friend.

* * *

VIOLET was in a basket chair under the apple trees, knitting a pink sweater for Sybil. "How nice to see you! We've been missing you." Then her keen perceptions told her something was wrong. "My dear, what's up? Can I help?"

Katharine sat down and the whole story poured from her lips. She held nothing back. Violet Merser did not interrupt once, but her dark eyes reflected a boundless sympathy.

"What am I to do?" Katharine finished dully. "I must have been mad yesterday. He's run away now. Evidently it was all a horrible joke to him. . . ."

Shocked by the other's suffering, the older woman sought for words to comfort her. "You couldn't be so wrong in trusting him. He has a good face, I liked him from the start."

The girl lifted her head. "You did? Really and truly?"

"He's not bad," Violet Merser assured her. "There's some mystery here. It can probably be cleared up. Wait and see."

"If my father finds out—or Bertine—" Katharine went on, "I might as well be dead."

"Don't talk like that. Do you suppose," ventured Mrs. Merser, "that neither one of them—your father or stepmother—has a single folly with which to reproach themselves?"

"I don't know. Probably not."

"Nonsense," said Violet briskly. "Anyhow, you're not to worry about them. Brace up, child. The world hasn't come to an end. I know it looks frightful to you, but probably in a week from now the whole affair will be straightened out."

"You think so?"

"I really do."

But after the girl had gone away Violet Merser was not so certain. What a strange tangle of circumstances it was! Certainly, on the face of it, one wouldn't say that a young man who was engaged to one girl and married to another and who, further, disappeared on the night following the ceremony, sounded particularly honorable. Especially since two detectives had visited him just an hour or two before his departure.

* * *

IN a hospital ward in the city, high above the turgid stream that was the East River, Michael Heatheroe lay. He tossed and turned on his narrow bed, and occasionally muttered an incoherent word or two.

Miss Smithers, the nurse on duty in the ward, glanced at him interestedly as she made an entry in his chart.

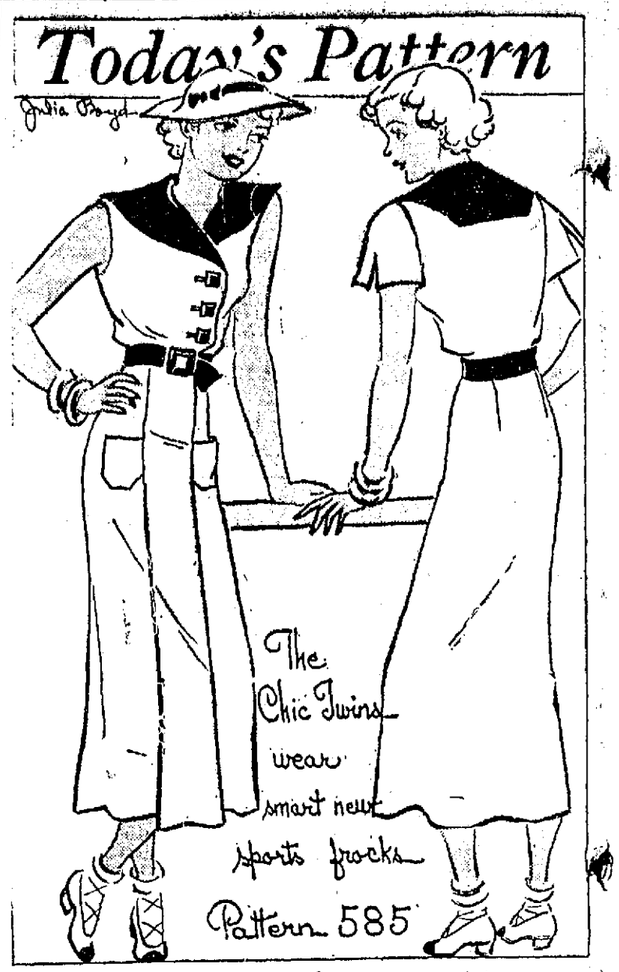

"Good-looking fellow," she said to the supervisor who was a friend of hers. "It's too bad."

A newspaper reporter whose "beat" included this particular hospital wrote a brief paragraph about a hatless young man "possibly 27 years old" who had been injured in a taxicab accident at Park avenue and 48th street. The city editor ran a blue pencil through a good many items that night. So the story of Michael's misadventures appeared only in the early editions of the newspaper. The late edition, which came to the Strykhurst table at Innicock, did not contain this account. Katharine, distraught as she was, searched the papers for mention of accidents, since Violet Merser had, sensibly enough, suggested that some such happening might explain Michael's silence. She did not really believe in the possibility. By this time she was fairly well convinced that Michael Heatheroe had played a cruel joke on the girl who had married him.

So the day passed, and the mystery deepened. And in Katharine's sick heart hope fluttered and died.

"The Universiy gis a state supported institution maintained by thetaxpayers of Arkansas for the benefit of the young people of the state. In addition to the usual literary and classical courses offered in colleges, it comprises, as a part of its organization, the state college of agriculture and engineering, and is the only institution in the state giving complete courses and degrees in these important industrial subjects. ## Regulations On

I am at the present time making up a list of questions to be submitted to the attorney general of this state for his opinion as to whether or not certain related items are taxable under th law," said Wiseman.

"I have found that section of the law (among exemptions) which reads as follows: "All medicines necessary for the preservation of public health' to be the hardest question in the sales tax law to analyze. After seeking the advice of responsible men in all walks of life, I have decided to make the following regulations with reference to medicine:

"All proprietary medicines and basic drugs are hereby exempt from the provisions of this act for the purpose of taxation."

Wiseman said his rules were formulated after conferences with business men in all lines, that he believed them fair, but that "I reserve the right to change any regulation that is promulgated at this time if I am convinced that the regulation is unfair or could be improved upon."

He said he would welcome written suggestions from business men and taxpayers.

His department will send out copies of the law to all merchants within the week and forms for making returns are now in the hands of the state printers.

It would require about 500 years to complete every course offered at Yale.

State's Fire Loss in May Was $113,480

LITTLE ROCK.— (AP) —Arkansas' property fire loss during May was approximately $113,480, an increase of $15,000 over the same month for 1934, H. B. Savage, chief of the division of conservation, Arkansas fire prevention bureau, announced.

A total of 51 fires was reported during the month, which was practically the same in number and amount as in May of last year, Savage reported. For the first time on the bureau's records there were no motor vehicle fires reported during the month. The number of dwelling and private garage fires continued to decrease.

The fire prevention bureau's report shows that 13 dwellings were destroyed with an approximate loss of $36,600. Fourteen dwellings were damaged with a loss of about $1600. The next most expensive fire classification was the destruction of a mercantile and office building at Dumas at a loss of $35,000.

Sister MARY'S KITCHEN

Shower Party for Bride-to-Be Calls for Dainty Refreshments

By MARY E. DAGUE
NEA Service Staff Writer

The most successful kitchen shower for a bride that I ever heard of was preceded by a merger of finances, and the purchase of an electrical combination toaster, griddle and waffle maker, which this bride particularly wanted. Guests each took dime present besides so there were plenty of packages to open before the main gift was presented.

In any kitchen shower, it's best to find out the special likes and dislikes of the bride. What utensils does she prefer in tin, in aluminum, in iron, in stainless steel, in glass, in earthenware?

Try to avoid duplication and unnecessarily frilly gadgets that may take more time to wash and keep clean than they save time in using.

Naturally the refreshments for the shower are of utmost importance to the hostess. She wants something to reflect the spirit of the occasion—not elaborate nor fussy but delicious.

If you want to carry out a pink and white idea, why not have tiny cup cakes with strawberry icing and vanilla ice cream? Make the cup cakes tiny, a mouthful each one.

Freezer Method.

One and one-third cups sweetened condensed milk, 2 cups thin cream, 1 cup cold water, 1 tablespoon vanilla, few grains salt.

Thoroughly blend all the ingredients before turning into dasher freezer. Turn until frozen. Remove dasher, repack in six parts ice to one part ice cream salt and let stand one hour at least before serving.

Vanilla Ice Cream
Automatic Refrigerator Method

Two-thirds cup sweetened condensed milk, ½ cup water, 1½ teaspoons vanilla, 1 cup whipping cream, few grains salt.

Blend milk, water and vanilla. Chill. Add salt to whipping cream and whip until firm. Fold into first mixture and turn into freezing tray. Freeze in automatic refrigerator until a mush. Remove from refrigerator and scrape from bottom and sides of pan and beat until smooth. Even off top and replace in freezing unitl until frozen for serving.

Tiny Cup Cakes

Two eggs, 2-3 cup sweetened condensed milk, 3-4 cup flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon almond extract, few grains salt.

Beat egg yolks with a Dover beater until thick and lemon colored. Add milk and continue beating until thoroughly blended. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt and sift again. Sift slowly into first mixture and stir until smooth. Add flavoring and fold in whites of eggs beaten until stiff. Pour into tiny paper baking cups and bake fifteen minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.).

Strawberry Frosting

Two and one-half cups confectioners' sugar, 4 tablespoons swetened condensed milk, ¼ cup crushed fresh strawberries, 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Sift sugar and stir into milk. Add berries forced through a coarse sieve. Add lemon juice and beat until smooth and creamy. Spread on cold cakes.

More than 450 people were killed in the San Francisco earthquake and fire of April 18, 1906.

Tomorrow's Menu

WHOSE WORD WILL YOU TAKE FOR BLOWOUT PROTECTION?

LOW wheels, larger tires, and the high speeds of today make blowout protection in your tires vital to your safety as never before. Are you accepting exaggerated and unsupported advertising and sales claims—or are you accepting the judgment of men who risk their lives on their tires and know from experience the tire that gives them the greatest blowout protection?

Thirty-three race drivers and their mechanics lined up for the dangerous, gruelling grind of the 500-Mile Race at the Indianapolis Speedway May 30th. Firestone Tires were purchased and used on every one of the thirty-three cars.

Kelly Petillo won the race at an average speed of 106 miles per hour. Wilbur Shaw was second, flashing across the finish line just behind the winner. Both drivers broke the track record without tire trouble. In fact, not one of the thirty-three drivers had tire trouble of any kind.

Gum-Dipping is one of the outstanding reasons why Firestone Tires give such amazing performance. By this process every cotton cord is soaked and every strand is insulated with pure liquid rubber, preventing internal friction and heat, the main cause of blowouts. Gum-Dipping is a patented extra process not used in any other make of tire.

When you consider that there were 832,000 automobile accidents in the United States last year, and of these, 43,000 were caused by blowouts, punctures, and skidding, you will more fully realize how very important it is for you to protect your life and the lives of others by equipping your car with Firestone Gum-Dipped High Speed Tires—the safest tires built.

It will be worth your time to read these three questions and their answers:

QUESTION 1—"Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—Leading university tests show Firestone High Speed Tires stop your car 15% quicker than the best of other popular makes of tires.

QUESTION 2—"Are they built to give me the greatest blowout protection?"

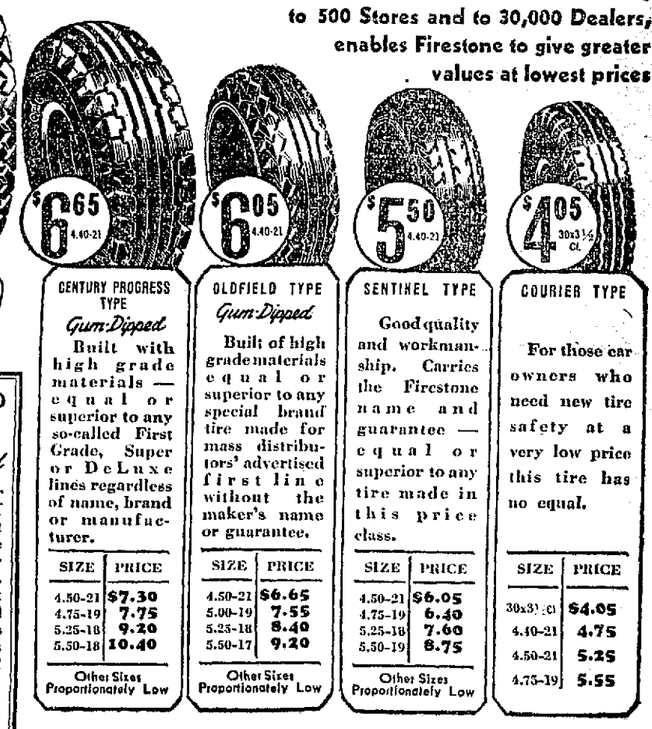

ANSWER—Unequaled performance records for sixteen consecutive years prove that Gum-Dipping gives you the greatest blowout protection ever known.

QUESTION 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

ANSWER—Thousands of car owners report unequaled mileage records—evidence of the longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed Tires.

2 Gum-Dipped cords give greater blowout protection. Gum-Dipping is not used in other tires.
3 Wider, flatter tread gives more than 50% longer non-skid wear.

The New Deal

re-employing and rehabilitating stranded farm families. More will be available if he can get that spent.

It is commonly feared that Tugwell, as an administrator, is a valuable presidential adviser. Liberals, especially, would hate to see him join the procession of Moley, Douglas, Johnson, Richberg, and others out of official life.

They hope Rex will fool them by making RRA something other than a flop.

High Court Even Up

The U. S. Supreme Court folded up for the season with a clean docket.

For three years it has been managing to dispose of all cases taken under advisement by the time of its last "opinion day."

During the summer the justices study writs of certiorari and petitions from those seeking to bring cases before the court.

Next big constitutionality test of an administration measure probably will be that of the AAA processing taxes.

Hit by Backfire

University of Chicago grads employed in the New Deal gathered ammunition from government records to use against a millionaire who charged their alma mater had become a hotbed of Communist teachings.

First they found the Food and Drug Administration had assessed a fine against the gentleman for a product which the administration decided wasn't all it should have been.

Then they learned that the wealthy critic was drawing a Spanish War pension of $10 a month from the government out west.
